Content of the workshop:

This hands-on training course will start with an introduction on the backgrounds and key principles of internationalization of the home curriculum. After that, participants will work on internationalising their own teaching. An important step in the process is the internationalization of current student learning outcomes.

Internationalizing curricula implies giving students the opportunity to experience perspectives from other countries and contexts. This will enable them to become aware that local practices are not universal. An interdisciplinary approach can also provide those other perspectives. Therefore, this training course will incorporate both international and interdisciplinary components to the participants' teaching. Exchanging and comparing with the work of the other participants will be an important element of this training course.

Learning outcomes:

At the end of the workshop the participants will be able to:

- have insights into the rationales and key principles of internationalization of the home curriculum
- have applied these to their own situation on the basis of internationalized learning outcomes
- have incorporated perspectives from other contexts and disciplines into their teaching design

Workshop facilitator:

Dr. Jos Beelen is Professor of Global Learning at The Hague University of Applied Sciences, where he leads a research group that explores the skills of lecturers to develop and teach internationalized curricula. He has published a range of articles on the implementation of internationalization at home. Jos is also a Visiting Professor at Coventry University and a senior trainer for the European Association for International Education (EAIE). From that association he was the recipient of the 2018 President's Award for his contribution to internationalization at home.
